The Markets

When Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke speaks, people listen.

The normally secretive Federal Reserve held its first-ever news conference last week and what Bernanke said turned out to be music to the market's ears. Here are some of his key comments:

- The Fed will end its current $600 billion bond-buying program (QE2) in June (no surprise).
- It will continue to reinvest the proceeds of maturing securities (a sign of continuing the easy money policy).
- It will maintain its exceptionally low target for federal funds for an extended period (another sign of continuing the easy money policy).

The markets seemed to like what they heard. Stocks, bonds, and commodities generally rose on the week. In fact, this latest round of bond-buying by the Fed -- the so-called QE2 -- has helped push the stock market up dramatically. According to an April 30 Barron's article, the Wilshire 5000, the broadest measure of the U.S. equity market, has risen and increased the wealth of stockholders by about $4.1 trillion, or 32%, since last August 26, 2010, the day before Bernanke floated the idea of additional Treasury purchases (QE2) at a speech in Jackson Hole, WY.

There was other positive news last week, too.

- The Dow Jones Industrial Average and the S&P 500 closed at their highest level since mid-2008.
- The Russell 2000 Index of small cap stocks and the Dow Jones Transportation Index both hit all-time highs.
- Thomson Reuters reported that of the 323 companies in the S&P 500 that reported earnings as of last Thursday, 73% beat earnings estimates.
- Gold prices hit another all-time high and silver prices rose 28% in April -- a monthly record.

But, all that good news aside, for some, the best news of the week was the spectacular wedding of William and Kate.

WHAT DO THE WEALTHY THINK ABOUT THEIR WEALTH? The U.S. Trust recently published a report based on a January-February 2011 nationwide survey of 457 high net worth adults with $3 million or more in investable assets. Here are a few of the interesting insights from the survey:

- The main ways the respondents accumulated their wealth were (respondents could choose more than one):
  - 77% on their own through earned income
  - 59% through investments
  - 35% through employer equity/stock options
  - 28% through real estate transactions
  - 27% through inheritance
- The main factors that contributed to accumulating their wealth were (respondents could choose more than one):
  - 84% cited focus and hard work
  - 50% cited intelligence
  - 45% cited personal values
  - 35% cited luck
  - 30% cited passion about their work
  - 14% cited an overwhelming desire not to be poor
- Accumulating wealth did not come without cost as 47% said there were some sacrifices. Here are the main sacrifices in order:
  - Haven't taken enough time off
  - Too busy to spend time with family
  - Self-worth became defined by wealth
  - Mishandled personal relationships
  - Missed important milestones of family and friends
  - Physical health suffered

This survey suggests that hard work, focus, earned income, and investments are a recipe for financial success. Some things never change.
